You know your Harry Potter house—both Hogwarts and Ilvermorny. You've chosen your wand. (Or rather, it's chosen you.) Now, it's time to discover your Patronus. J. K. Rowling surprised fans Thursday morning by revealing the latest feature of Pottermore—the official digital publisher for all things Potter—a quiz that allows fans of the series to discover their very own Patronuses. As explained on the Pottermore page, a Patronus is a form of advanced magic in which the witch or wizard casting the spell draws upon their happiest memories to produce a kind of shield to help protect themselves from Dementors, the guardians of the wizarding prison, Azkaban. When spell casters are able to successfully summon a corporeal Patronus—as opposed to some silver vapor—it often takes the shape of an animal (or even magical creature) unique to the witch or wizard. So far, users of the feature have reported receiving everything from a hedgehog to a unicorn. Rowling even revealed hers is a white swan. Wondering who else has your Patronus? From Harry's stag to Hermione's otter, here are some of the more memorable Patronuses featured in Harry Potter. Ron Weasley: Jack Russell Terrier Albus Dumbledore: Goat J.K. Rowling's Pottermore Patronus quiz doesn't disappoint. If you're wondering which animals you can get, we have a complete Patronus list. It may've been a long wait, but the official Patronus quiz on WizardingWorld.com (formerly known as Pottermore) awarded our patience. The music, the effects, and the animations raise the bar for personality quizzes. It's simply magical! Equally impressive is the number of animals within the Patronus test. All animals come with their own series of animations, which might explain why it took so long for Pottermore to create the quiz. I've personally enjoyed watching my West Highland Terrier prance around the screen! It turns out there are many animals, both from the Muggle world (though the latter are rare). Below, we've compiled a complete Patronus list, so you can see all the options on the quiz. And if you're curious about what J.K. Rowling's Patronus is, it's a heron! It's a h List Rare animals are marked. Pottermore is also telling some people that their Patronus is "unusual" - we don't know if this means if the animal is rare, or if it's just a little less common than other Patronuses. Rowling -Heron In J.K. Rowling's growing arsenal of Wizarding World magic (including potions, spells, charms, and plenty of fantastic beasts), the Patronus charm remains a fan favorite. It's among the most mysterious, revealing, and difficult types of magic to master, especially in its most powerful form. When done correctly, the defensive spell takes the form of a silvery-white animal, individually suited to the witch or wizard who cast it. Twenty-two characters in the "Harry Potter" universe are known to have mastered it. Here are all the shapes their Patronus charms take — plus Rowling's herself. Snape uses his doe Patronus to show Dumbledore that he never fell out of love with Lily, his childhood best friend. Warner Bros. Snape's doe Patronus reveals his one true motivation throughout Harry's life: to protect the child of the woman he loved. In "Deathly Hallows," Snape also uses his Patronus to help Harry on his quest to find Voldemort's horcruxes; a Patronus charm can be used to send messages, and Harry seems to subconsciously recognize the doe as an extension of his mother, allowing him to trust it. According to Rowling, Snape was the only Death Eaters generally generate, or fight alongside," she wrote in 2007. "They would not need Patronuses.""He was careful not to use the talking Patronus means of communication with [either Death Eaters or Order of the Phoenix members]," she added. "This was not difficult, as his particular job within the Order, ie, as spy, meant that sending a Patronus to any of them might have given away his true allegiance." Seamus can be seen practicing his Patronus charm in "Order of the Phoenix." Warner Bros. / Pottermore Seamus was able to conjure a full Patronus in a Dumbledore's Army meeting, but it disappeared very quickly, only revealed to be a fox during the Battle of Hogwarts: "And then a silver hare, a boar, and a fox soared past Harry, Ron, and Hermione's heads: The dementors fell back before the creatures' approach. Three more people had arrived out of the darkness to stand beside them, their wands outstretched, continuing to cast their Patronuses: Luna, Ernie, and Seamus." Rowling subscribes to legitimacy of the Patronus test on Pottermore. Evan Agostini/Invision/AP When Pottermore revealed its brand new Patronus test in 2016, which Rowling wrote herself, she told fans on Twitter that she had taken it twice."I took the Pottermore test (which I wrote) ages ago when it was a work in progress and got a pine marten Patronus. I was happy, because my fondness for weaselly creatures is well documented," she wrote on Twitter."However, when we finalized the Pottermore test last week I took it again and found that it had changed (which, as we know, can happen). My new Patronus has personal associations and I like it even better," she revealed.—J.K. Rowling (@jk_rowling) September 22, 2016"It's a heron," she further clarified. The Patronus Charm is difficult, and many witches and wizards are unable to produce a full, corporeal Patronus, a guardian which generally takes the shape of the animal with whom they share the deepest affinity. You may suspect, but you will take until you succeed in conjuring it." — Miranda Goshawk's overview of the Patronus Charm[src] The Patronus Charm (Expecto Patronum) was the most famous and one of the most powerful defensive charms known to wizardkind.[4] It was an immensely complicated and extremely difficult spell, that channelled the caster's positive emotions into a powerful protection and evoked a partially-tangible positive emoty force known as a Patronus (pl. Patronuses)[5] or spirit guardian.[3] It was the primary protection against Dementors and Lethifolds, against Which there were no other defences. There were two types of Patronuses had no particular shape and form, and incorporeal Patronuses had no particular shape and form. way corporeal Patronuses did. However, some wizards like Remus Lupin chose to cast incorporeal Patronuses to hide their identity.[1] History Early history It is evident from old woodcuts and scrolls that the Patronus Charm had been used since ancient times. Therefore, it is unknown who created it, or when it was first invented.[6] The charm also has a long association with those fighting for lofty or noble causes (those able to produce corporeal Patronuses were often elected to high office within the Wizengamot and Ministry of Magic).[4] According to legend, one of the most famous Patronuses of all time was a lowly mouse, which belonged to a young wizard called Illyius. Illyius cast the Patronus Charm when his village was being attacked by the Dark wizard Raczidian and his army of Dementors. Despite the mouse's diminutive size, it shone with a brilliant light, bringing the Dementors to a halt as it nimbly moved through the ranks of fleeing villagers.[6] Enraged, Raczidian decided to enter the fray himself. He tried to summon a Patronus to ward off Illyius's mouse. However, Raczidian failed to remember that only the pure of heart could produce a Patronus. Thus, for the first time in history, it was revealed what happened when a competent, but unworthy wizard or witch attempted the spell. Maggots shot out of Raczidian's wand and quickly devoured him as they engulfed his entire body. The villagers then hailed Illyius as a hero.[6] Second Wizarding War "And out of the end of his wand burst, not a shapeless cloud of mist, but a blinding, dazzling, silver animal. He screwed up his eyes, trying to see what it was. It looked like a horse. It was galloping silently away from him, across the black surface of the lake. He saw it lower its head and charge at the swarming dementors... " - Harry Potter's stag Patronus fending off hundreds of Dementors[src] Harry Potter took Anti-Dementors[src] Harry Potter took Anti-Dementor lessons with Remus Lupin in order to learn the advanced charm and so was one of the youngest to attempt this charm with actual results.[1] During a Quidditch match against Ravenclaw in 1994, he cast his very first corporeal Patronus, when several Slytherin students were impersonating Dementors.[7] He performed the charm again in June when he, along with Hermione Granger and Sirius Black, were being attacked by over a hundred Dementors, so he cast a corporeal Patronus powerful enough to drive them all away.[8][9] In 1995, Harry cast the charm against a Boggart that he thought was a Dementor during the third task of the Triwizard Tournament.[10] The following summer, he came under attack by two Dementors and managed to drive them away with the charm, leading to him being put on trial for underage magic in an attempt to discredit him.[11] Harry Potter teaching the members of the D.A. the charm Harry also taught the members of Dumbledore's Army the charm was used frequently to ward off Dementors such as when The Trio escaped from the Ministry of Magic after obtaining the Horcrux locket and during the Battle of Hogwarts. Severus Snape also conjured his Doe Patronus to guide Harry to the hiding place of the Phoenix would send out messages with their Patronuses such as Kingsley Shacklebolt and Arthur Weasley who in 1997 delivered warnings. [12] After the war In 2011, Daniel Page, Ivy Warrington and their friend cast the Patronus Charm to fend off Dementors in the dungeon of Victor Gridley's caravan after practising it in the whole school year.[13] In 2020 of an alternate reality, Hermione Granger stopped Ron Weasley from casting the spell to drive off Dementors in order to buy time for Scorpius Malfoy to travel back in time and set things right. Severus Snape subsequently cast the spell, surprising Scorpius with its shape of a doe. Snape sent his Patronus to clear the way for Scorpius to reach the Great Lake, sacrificing himself in the process since the doe protected Scorpius instead of its caster. The doe disappeared when Snape was given the Dementor's Kiss, but succeeded in safely guiding Scorpius to the lake.[14] Nature "Well, when it works correctly, it conjures up a Patronus, which is a kind of anti-Dementor — a guardian which acts as a shield between you and the Dementor. The Patronus is a kind of positive force, a projection of the very things that the Dementor feeds upon hope, happiness, the desire to survive — but it cannot feel despair, as real humans can, so the Dementors can't hurt it. But I must warn you, Harry, that the Charm might be too advanced for you. Many qualified wizards have difficulty with it." — Remus Lupin explaining to Harry Potter the charm's nature[src] The Patronus represented that which was hidden, unknown but necessary within the personality. When a human was confronted with inhuman evil, such as the Dementor, they must draw upon resources he or she may never have needed, and the Patronus was the awakened secret self that lay dormant until needed, but which must now be brought to light. Patronuses took forms that their casters might not expect, for which they had never felt a particular affinity, or (in rare cases) even recognised. Every Patronus was as unique as its creator and even identical twins had been known to produce very different Patronuses.[4] Given their long affinity with humans, it is perhaps unsurprising that among the most common Patronuses when cast (although it must be remembered that any corporeal Patronus was highly unusual) were dogs, cats, and horses.[4] The unusual witches and wizards who produced a Patronus that took the form of their essential self in common life, who may, indeed, have paraded tendencies that others might have preferred to conceal. Whatever the form of their Patronus, one would be well-advised to show respect, and occasionally caution, towards a witch or wizard who produced the Patronus of their choice.[4] Remus Lupin owned a spellbook which detailed the casting of the Patronus Charm.[15] Casting Harry Potter: "And how do you conjure it?" Remus Lupin: "With an incantation, which will work only if you are concentrating, with all your might, on a single, very happy memory." — Discussion on how to conjure a Patronus[src] To successfully cast the spell, one began by mustering the happiest memory they could think of (the happier the memory, the better the charm would work).[1] Alternatively, one could imagine a scenario that would make for a very happy memory, as Harry did for his D.A.D.A. O.W.L.[11] The next step was to begin drawing circles with their wand so as to increase the power of their spell.[6] They must then say the incantation, Expecto Patronum; the Patronus would come from the tip of the wand and could be directed towards a target by pointing one's wand at said target.[16] The vast majority of witches and wizards were unable to produce any form of Patronus, and to create even an intangible one was generally considered a mark of superior magical ability.[4] Rubeus Hagrid was an example of a wizard that couldn't conjure any form of Patronus, as the charm was too difficult for him.[17] Remus Lupin disguise the form one's Patronus took, which was done both by Severus Snape to hide his love for Lily Evans, and by Remus Lupin, who felt it would give away his condition.[4] Also, some witches and wizards may have been unable to produce a Patronus at all until they had undergone some kind of psychic shock.[4] Although it was extremely hard to fully conjure a Patronus, in an alternate reality, fourth-years in Defence Against the Dark Arts class were tasked with casting this charm.[14] Difficulty "That's very very advanced magic." — The difficulty and complexity of the charm[src] The Patronus Charm was widely regarded as advanced magic, far beyond N.E.W.T.-level; in 1994 Remus Lupin stated that the charm was, in fact "ridiculously advanced".[1] This charm was, indeed, so perilous, that few wizards/witches could conjure up a true Patronus. It was very complex and many qualified wizards and witches had trouble with it.[4] In fact, Harry Potter was one of the youngest known wizards able to cast a Patronus; he was taught the members how to use the charm. Some were even successful in casting a corporeal form, though Harry said this might be because there was no Dementor to make them frightened.[11] However, three members were later able to cast corporeal Patronuses in the presence of Dementors.[12] Being able to cast a patronus, whilst fighting Dementors or not, was not required to graduate from Hogwarts, so it was something that was taught under special circumstances. Amelia Bones and potential members of the D.A. were all very impressed when Harry Potter revealed that he could cast not only a Patronus Charm but a corporeal one. directly reliant on the caster retaining a particular mental state, the Charm was more difficult to cast in emotionally trying circumstances. For instance, Harry Potter, Ron Weasley, and Hermione Granger all had difficulty casting their Patronuses when under the negative influence of Salazar Slytherin's Locket, one of Lord Voldemort's Horcruxes, and after witnessing the death of Fred Weasley in the final battle.[12] This feature of the Charm was particularly unfortunate since the Charm's primary use was to defend against Dementors, dark creatures specifically equipped to mentally unhinge people (and hence was partly why it was regarded as such advanced, difficult magic). Self-confidence might also play an important role in casting the spell. In 1994, Harry was able to cast the spell successfully, driving off a large number of Dementors in the process (which, according to Severus Snape, was only achievable by a very powerful wizard), thus saving Sirius and a younger version of himself, seemingly without recalling a happy memory, when he realised that he had already done it, although Harry could have had a 'happy memory' upon realising that he had saved all three of their souls.[9] Worthiness "While there is a widespread and justified belief that a wizard who is not pure of heart cannot produce a successful Patronus (the most famous example of the spell backfiring is that of the spell backfiring is the spell backfiring is that of the spell backfiring is the sp the Dark wizard Raczidian, who was devoured by maggots), a rare few witches and wizards of questionable morals have succeeded in producing the Charm..." - It's rare for a Dark wizard to successfully conjure a Patronus[src] Raczidian's demise while trying to cast a Patronus It was a general belief held by the wizarding world that only those who were pure of heart were able to cast a fully-fledged Patronuses; this, however, was untrue, as several characters with negative personality traits were able to cast a fully-fledged Patronus.[4] Although generally dark witches and wizards would not try to produce a Patronus, not having any need for one, most dark wizards would be devoured by maggots coming from their wand and consuming the caster.[6] For this reason, Lord Voldemort and his Death Eaters were not able to cast a Patronus Charm (not that it was necessary, as they already had the dark creatures under their control via their affinity to darkness, and would have no use for Patronuses).[18] Draco Malfoy numbered among those unable to cast the Patronus Charm. Severus Snape was the only Death Eater capable of casting the charm.[12] Some witches and wizards of questionable morals, such as Dolores Umbridge, were able to produce corporeal Patronuses.[4][12] Merula Snyde could only conjure an incorporeal Patronus, though it should be noted that she was only a fourth-year at the time and it was an advanced spell; the only other wizards known to produce a corporeal Patronus by that age were Harry Potter, Nymphadora Tonks, and Jacob's sibling.[19] Patricia Rakepick was a dark witch who sadistically tortured Merula Snyde with the Cruciatus Curse and murdered Rowan Khanna with the Killing Curse, and yet was able to cast a corporeal Patronus in the form of a lioness.[20] The Patronus A successfully conjured Patronus could take two forms: incorporeal and corporeal and corporeal and corporeal shield Patronus[src] Harry Potter casting an incorporeal Patronus at the Black Lake An incorporeal[21] Patronus was one which did not resemble any living features (if any). Incorporeal Patronuses resembled a burst of vapour or smoke without any clearly defined form shooting from the tip of the wand. While they might be partially effective at halting Dementors (but not repelling them) and shielding the caster from them, incorporeal Patronuses, and were regarded as a simpler and weaker version of the Charm. However, being able to cast even an incorporeal Patronuses, and were regarded as a simpler and weaker version of the Charm. "What does a Patronus look like?" Remus Lupin: "Each one is unique to the wizard who conjures it." — Discussion of corporeal forms a Patronus was one that was fully-formed, taking the shape of a bright-silver, translucent animal. It was the strongest form a Patronus could take, being able to fully drive Dementors away. The specific animal forms that a corporeal Patronus took would vary from person to person and reflect each individual's innermost personality. Patronus forms, however, were subject to change if the caster went through an emotional upheaval of some sort, including falling in eternal, unchanging love.[22] For example, Nymphadora Tonks's Patronus changed from its previous form to that of a doe, the same as Lily Evans, though this may have been the case all along rather than a change from its original form, as Snape was in love with Lily for most of his life. Based on the fact that Patronuses were conjured by recalling happy memories, it stands to reason that a Patronus might change its form after one fell in love and the memories used to conjure the Patronus largely revolved around the person the caster was in love with. In addition, it seemed that some couples had "complementary" Patronuses (male and female forms of the same animal), such as Lily and James Potter. It is, however, unknown if this was a coincidence or not. If a wizard was an Animagus and could summon a corporeal Patronus, the two might take the same form. This was the case for Minerva McGonagall and James Potter.[12] Remus Lupin's Patronus is unknown. It stands to reason that it was likely due to Remus's best memories of his youth revolving around the acceptance he felt despite his condition, in which he felt more at home in his wolf form during those times, rather than cursed by it and also due to his nature as desiring a sense of belonging at his core, much like a true wolf. Most Patronuses took the form of an ordinary animal. Magical creatures, such as Albus Dumbledore's phoenix Patronus, were uncommon. It was extremely rare for Patronuses to take the form of extinct animals. Hedley Fleetwood's woolly mammoth Patronus the size of a giant, [23] although whether it was a giant or not is unknown. The corporeal Patronus was also better at repelling Dementors than the incorporeal form. Uses "As a pure, protective magical concentration of happiness and hope (the recollection of a single talisman memory is essential in its creation) it is the only spell effective against Dementors." — The Patronus is the only known method of defence against a Dementor[src] There were two known uses for the Patronus Charm. The first and main use of the Patronus was to drive off certain dark creatures, such as Dementors fed on happy memories, causing humans to drown in their own sorrow and sadness, the Patronus acted as a shield of sorts, of which the Dementor would try to feed off instead — the Patronus was comprised exclusively of positive feelings and couldn't affect it. Harry casting a Patronus during the hunt for Horcruxes The other use was devised by Albus Dumbledore, who invented a way of using the Patronus (corporeal and incorporeal) as a means of communication. They could deliver messages, speaking with the voice of the Patronus for communication offered great advantages in security, as Patronuses identified the caster and were Dark Arts-proof.[3] A good example of this was when Minerva McGonagall used her feline Patronus to call for help to the other Heads of Houses in 1998, when she found out that Harry Potter had returned to Hogwarts in search of Rowena Ravenclaw's Diadem.[12] Multiple Patronuses could be cast for communication, as McGonagall was able to create three. Another was when Severus Snape used his Patronus to lead Harry Potter to a pool in the Forest of Dean in 1997, where he had laid the Sword of Gryffindor for Harry's Patronus with instructions or if he was hiding and controlling it for this task. Harry's Patronus was able to follow both oral and physical commands. They also only remained active whilst the caster was focusing on them. If they were not protecting anyone, Patronuses seemed to take on the traits of the creature they resembled and generally followed their caster around. practitioners "The majority of witches and wizards are unable to produce Patronuses and to do so is generally considered a mark of superior magical ability." — Only a select few witches and wizards can cast a Patronus[src] Witch/wizard Patronal form Notes Andros the Invincible Something allegedly the size of a giant[23] Stated on his Chocolate Frog Card as the only wizard to make a Patronus, which corresponded to Illyius's fellow villagers mocked him as they had never seen such a small and weak-looking Patronus, which corresponded to Illyius's fellow villagers mocked him as they had never seen such a small and weak-looking Patronus, which corresponded to Illyius's fellow villagers mocked him as they had never seen such a small and weak-looking Patronus, which corresponded to Illyius's fellow villagers mocked him as they had never seen such a small and weak-looking Patronus, which corresponded to Illyius's fellow villagers mocked him as they had never seen such a small and weak-looking Patronus, which corresponded to Illyius's fellow villagers Dementors, Illyius's mouse Patronus proved to be stronger than the others, making him a hero.[6] Flavius Belby Something with horns[24] In Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them, it is recorded that he cast off a Lethifold by performing the Patronus Charm. It says the Lethifold by performing the Patronus Charm. Swan Seen in the last Dumbledore's Army meeting in 1996. Aberforth Dumbledore Goat Summoned outside the Hog's Head in an attempt to convince the Death Eaters who had seen Harry's Patronus that they really saw a goat. Albus Dumbledore Phoenix The bird whose loyalty he earned, Fawkes, was a phoenix. He used it in 1995 as a message to Hagrid when Krum was stunned. It was described as "a ghostly bird that flew off in the direction of Hagrid's house". A rare form. Seamus Finnigan Fox He could not produce a fully formed corporeal Patronus in Dumbledore's Army, though, in the Battle of Hogwarts in 1998, he managed to conjure a Patronus in the shape of a fox. Hedley Fleetwood Woolly mammoth[6] An unusual form due to the extreme rarity of Patronuses based on extinct animals. Hermione Granger Otter Seen in the last Dumbledore's Army meeting in 1996. It is apparently the only spell Hermione had trouble with, as said in 1997 while escaping from the Ministry of Magic. Harry's Patronus was in the shape of his father's Animagus form and Patronus. He learned how to conjure a Patronus at an exceptionally young age. James Potter James' Animagus form was also that of a stag. Luna Lovegood Hare[12][25] Seen in the Battle of Hogwarts in 1998.[12] Minerva McGonagall Cat Just before the Battle of Hogwarts, she sent her Patronus out to alert the other Heads of House that Hogwarts from the prosecutors. Her favourite animal, as shown by the many plates with cats on them in her office. She was able to cast the Patronus due to her affinity with the locket Horcrux's evil influence.[12] Lily Potter Doe Mentioned in conjunction with Snape's Patronus. It was also the female form of her husband's Patronus. Severus Snape Acted as Harry's guide through the woods to where Godric Gryffindor's Sword was hidden. Snape's Patronus mirrored Lily's due to his unspoken love for her that began when they were small children. Cast by Severus Snape to aid Scorpius Malfoy and himself in the alternate reality created by Albus Potter and Scorpius in 2020. Symposia Rawle Ladybird[6] An unusual form that was very powerful despite its tiny size.[6] Kingsley Shacklebolt Lynx Seen in 1997 when he warned the Order during Bill and Fleur's wedding of the downfall of the Ministry of Magic and Rufus Scrimgeour's death. Nymphadora Tonks Jack rabbit[4] Tonks learned the Patronus Charm at some point by or during her fourth year.[19] Her Patronus originally took the form of a jackrabbit. Wolf The form of Tonks' Patronus changed in 1996. It became a wolf due to her love for Remus Lupin. [26] Changes of Patronus are rare and usually caused by devastating life traumas. Occasionally when a witch and a wizard are married, their Patronuses will match each other (most likely because the witch/wizard's happy thought will be that of their spouse). Remus Lupin[27] Remus often deliberately disguised the form of his Patronus, usually by casting it as an incorporeal one, because he felt that it would give away too much about his lycanthropy.[4][27] Arthur Weasley Weasel First seen when he sent a message about Rufus Scrimgeour's arrival on Harry's seventeenth birthday. Later seen when Arthur sent a Patronus to 12 Grimmauld Place to inform Harry, Ron and Hermione that the Weasley Jack Russell terrier[28] Seen in the last Dumbledore's Army meeting in 1996. and in the Battle of Hogwarts in 1998. The Latin word exspecto is the first person singular form of exspectare meaning "to await", thus the charm's incantation translates into "I await a patron" (since patronum is the singular accusative form of patronus, meaning it is the case which a noun or an adjective describing the noun takes when it is the direct object of a sentence, which in the spell's translation, it is). However, not all Animagu forms are known. However, not all Animagu forms are known. However, not all Animagu forms are known. this is universal among werewolves or not is unknown. In Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, when Dementors attack Harry, Hermione and Sirius, Harry's Patronus is very weak and thin (based on how there were tons of Dementors) yet the Dementors attack Harry. it though. In the first chapter of Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, a white peacock appears in the gardens of Malfoy Manor. Some fans believed this bird to be Lucius Malfoy's Patronus. However, J. K. Rowling stated that no Death Eater stight alongside that which Patronuses fight against.[33] This means that the peacock was in fact a living creature. It is stated in Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, the more moderate Expecto Patronum is a ball of light. In the console versions, it works as a guided-missile that can only be steered left or right, and accelerate. In the PC version, before being cast, a white ring goes up Harry's Patronus) to attack Dementors (it also produces lightning effects). At the climax of the game, a stag (Harry's Patronus) jumps out of the wand to drive away all the Dementors nearby attacking Harry and Sirius, and its during that battle in the console versions, Harry's Patronus changes into a stag with altered controls. In the said video game, the first video game, the first video game, the first video game adaption of Harry Potter: Years 1-4/LEGO Harry Potter: Years 5-7 the Patronus Charm appears to push the Dementors away with the first shot, and a second shot kills them. The lecture that Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix is extremely similar to the lecture Remus Lupin gave him in the film adaptation of Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban. In Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1, Dolores Umbridge's Patronus is described in the novel as taking the form of a lynx; however, in the film it is depicted as a shimmering comet of light from which springs silvery images of witches and wizards screaming in terror as Kingsley's voice details the death of Scrimgeour and the fall of the Ministry. In LEGO Harry Potter: Years 1-4, Voldemort, Lucius Malfoy, Walden Macnair, Barty Crouch Inr, and an unnamed Death Eater can all cast the spell, despite the fact that Rowling stated that no Death Eater besides Severus Snape could produce a Patronus. It is most likely that this was simply incorporated for gameplay purposes.[34] According to W.O.M.B.A.T., it is possible that Patronuses that this is not the case and that the form of the animal has no correlation to the strength of the Patronus (see, for instance, Illyius and Symposia Rawle). J. K. Rowling stated that the happy memory that would be when she learned that Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone was going to be published.[35] She has also stated that she'd like for her Patronus to be an otter, like Hermione's, but she has a feeling it might actually be a large dog.[33] However, in a message on Twitter in 2014, she claimed it would be a pine marten.[36] Additionally, in a 2000 interview, she stated that the Patronus Charm was her favourite spell in the series so far.[37] Rowling later revealed that a pine marten was what she had tested as in the initial form of the tasks given to the player in the final Chapter of the game Wonderbook: Book of Spells. For learning the incantation and gesture, the player is given the Trophy "Expecto Patronum!" On the next page, the player is given the chance to cast a true Patronus, the form of which is apparently chosen randomly. Amongst the possible Patronuses are a bat, a bull, a cat, a goat, a horse, a rabbit, a scorpion and a snake.[39] For discovering their Patronus, the player is awarded the Trophy "True Patronus." J. K. Rowling has stated the only way that a Patronus is able to change its current form is through level. Although J. K. Rowling has stated the only way that a Patronus." J. K. Rowling has stated the only way that a Patronus is able to change its current form is Patronus." J. K. Rowling has stated the only way that a Patronus." J. K. Rowling has stated the always translates it as Patroni. On 22 September, 2016, Pottermore unveiled the long-awaited and discussed option for members of the site to determine their patronus. This takes the form of a quiz of several questions that can only be taken once, at which point the member's Patronus is revealed and added to their member profile.[40] When J. K. Rowling was asked about the form of Newton Scamander's Patronus, she said that it would be a spoiler to future films of the Fantastic Beasts series. [41] On Pottermore (and in other releases), a few animals such as horses, cats, squirrells and swans, have Patronuses in different hair colours of the animal. It is unknown how hard the difference is to tell in-universe, since all Patronuses are silver in colour, and therefore all look the same (aside from their forms). Patronus shield he conjured being used to force a Boggart in the form of a Dementor back into its trunk. Also, Patronuses produced by the members of Dumbledore's Army make noises and are capable of interacting with physical objects, such as Ron's dog Patronus knocking over Neville Longbottom. Also, in Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1, Umbridge's Patronus was heard hissing. There was a noted change in appearance of Patronuses in general in the Order of the Phoenix film. In films 5-8, Patronuses appear to be very wispy and airy, while in the third film they look more substantial, solid and brighter. In Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 1, during the infiltration of the Ministry of Magic, Umbridge's Patronus was very clearly seen several times in the same scene and often looked less like a cat and more like a reanimated, feline corpse, with the skeletal features visible. This is odd for a Patronus (they usually look quite 'alive' and well) and its twisted form may be a nod to both Umbridge's nature and the circumstances under which it was cast. In the film adaptation of Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, the Patronus in its powerful wave-like form emits a deep reverberating sound. In Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2, this effect was also used when Aberforth Dumbledore protected Hogwarts from Dementors.
